Kitchen Organizing

If you are like most people, you spend a lot of time in your kitchen. Even if you are not the one that does most of the cooking, you still end up spending a lot of time there – eating, socializing, doing homework, playing board games, you name it. The kitchen always seems to be where the “action is!” Keeping in mind that you’ll be spending a lot of time there, it would be easier if the kitchen were clean and organized. You’ll get more done...quicker, easier, and with less stress.

So, where to begin? Well, that greatly depends on your family, the status of your kitchen, and what you use your kitchen for the most, but this checklist will help you get started.

1. Clear the counters. If there is paperwork piled up, sort it and file it. If there are items stored there that belong in another room, put them where they belong. Remove everything else, even the items you intend to keep on the counter (like a toaster, bowl of fruit, etc.) and wipe down the counter tops. Then replace only those items that logically make sense to you for your kitchen. Leave space for putting out additional items (like dessert trays and snack bowls) when you have company.

2. Empty the refrigerator and freezer. Literally take everything out, check dates and purge anything that is expired. Wipe out the inside. Replace all items in an organized manner. For example: condiments in the door, meats on the lowest shelf, produce in the produce bin, kid snacks at their level, etc.
3. Empty the pantry. Do exactly the same thing with your pantry as you did for your refrigerator in # 2.
4. Clear out all of the cabinets and drawers. Purge any duplicates, donate them or throw them out. When replacing items in the cabinets and drawers, keep your plates and glasses near your dishwasher for easy loading and unloading. Keep your bake ware near your oven. Put your pots and pans near your stove top. If you have young children, be sure to keep sharps and cleaning products out of their reach or under lock and key.
5. Enjoy the space. Use up the extra food that's not yet expired, but nearing their expiration date and make a party of it. Have the guests bring some items to fill in the menu and enjoy your kitchen.
